To incoming English I College Preparatory Students:

Your Summer Reading and Writing work will be reflective of what, and how, we will be approaching your academic year.

English 1 College Preparatory (CP)

SUMMER READING:

All College Prep. Freshman will read the following:

Outliers by Malcolm Gladwell
ISBN: 978-0-316-01792-3

SUMMER WRITING:

Short answer responses to the attached questions. Short answer responses are, at least, one to two paragraphs in length, include an introductory sentence, and an actual answer to the question. Please be careful, if a question is in two-parts, make sure to answer both parts completely. These questions will be collected on the first day of English class, discussed, and be part of a short, in-class, writing assignment; questions and associated in-class writing assignment will be graded.

Please complete these questions on a separate sheets of paper

1. When does a Canadian hockey player want to be born? Why does it matter?
2. What's the 10,000-hour rule
3. What problems might there be in Gladwell's list of history's richest individuals?
4. Look at the time of year the techies were born. Do the dates support the time of year claim?
5. What might explain the fact that not all Nobel winners come from the very best colleges, other than Gladwell's IQ "good enough" claim?
6. Does Chris Langan's experience mean, as Gladwell claims that success isn't really about individual merit?
7. Gladwell claims historical treatment of Jews in both Europe and the U.S. led to their dominance in the garment industry and NYC law firms. How much of an individual Jewish New Yorker's success should be attributed to the historical factors?
8. Gladwell gives several reasons for Asian academic success. What are they and which do you find most convincing?
9. Do the privileges and advantages Gladwell cites seem as decisive as he claims? Are these advantages unique?
10. What advantages have you benefited from? Why haven't they been enough to catapult you to an outlier level of success? Alternatively, if you consider yourself very successful, to what do you attribute your success?
11. Rate Outliers on a scale of 1 to 5, 5 being best.
